While Princeton chanted hymns of rejoicing in one lot, the autocrats of Burkeville howled, hoisted, yelped and snarled in the next, finishing with the most terrible and motley plan of praise that ever floated heavenward, when Holmes rapped the ball over the head of Sockalexis for a home run.

Burkeville no longer; it is Holmesville now. A man with a voice like a Turkish call to prayers, stood up on the pine board from which he had been extracting splinters during the game, and thundered, "I move this here section of the Polo Grounds be named Holmesville in honor of Ducky, the home run hitter."

When Ducky makes his next muff of a fly ball, the same crescendo voiced rooster is likely to suggest that the name of the suburb be changed to Mudville.

Holmes was pretty much the whole thing in yesterday's game. Five of New York's runs can be directly attributed to the fact that Mr. Freedman saw fit to hire him from the Louisville.

He got his first real good crack at the ball in the fourth inning. With one hand out Wilson gave Warner and Clarke bases on balls. Very soon it became evident that Wilson couldn't have done anything more imprudent if he had desired. Holmes came to the plate next. Wilson got a strike on him and then tempted the abbreviated youngster with a straight ball, squarely over the plate, at just the right height.

It was like pointing out a tree of ripe cherries to a small boy.

Holmes swung on the ball viciously, and met it so full and fair, that he started its seams and knocked it over Sockalexis's head.

Sockalexis's Weakness.
The Indian's weakness is a fly ball over his head. He failed to start for it quickly enough, and the ball went through the ropes, Holmes making a circuit of the bases, and sending two men home ahead of him. It is doubtful whether Sockalexis could have caught the ball, but he might at least have prevented it from becoming a home run by knocking it down with one hand.

In the next inning Holmes again made a hit in the nick of time, and after that exhibition Burkeville was willing to forget its traditions.

CINCINNATI SHUT OUT.

Kennedy Pitched Great Ball and Brooklyn Made the Only Run in the Game.

By Charles F. Mathison.

To win a game by one run is a highly satisfactory achievement for the victors, and at the same time it affords the losers an opportunity to dwell on the luck of the other fellows and the blind perversity of the umpire.

Brooklyn won yesterday's game at Eastern Park because William Kennedy pitched one of the greatest games of ball seen in this neck of woods in some time. The Red Stockings were utterly unable to connect with a delivery at the proper time, and but for a few errors behind him, the visitors would have never got within walking distance of a run.

Brooklyn's line-up was his delivery hit safely, Burke getting a single in the first, Irwin drawing a hit for one base in the fourth, and Beckley making a two-bagger in the fifth. In each of those innings just four men stepped to the plate, and no one got beyond second base.

An error in the seventh nearly accomplished what Cincinnati failed to do with the bat.

Irwin, the first man up, sailed to second on Smith's high throw to first, and Beckley, the second man up, sailed to second on Smith's high throw to first, and Beckley, the second man up, sailed to second on Smith's high throw to first.

Mr. Peltz came to the front with a grounder straight at Cavanaugh, the latter gentleman had been fumbling with extreme regularity a shunder passed over the head of the catcher, and the umpire called it a ball.

As the Cincinnati failed to take advantage of the lucky seventh the Brooklyn concluded it was their time to distinguish themselves. After Grim had died at first Kennedy got a chance on Irwin's low throw to first.

Just at that point the plot got thick as a border melodrama. Griffin stole second. Ordinarily that assertion would not mean much, but in this case it was the first of a series of events.

Emale in regard to a decision, was removed from the grounds, Brown taking centre field and Wright switching to third. Score:
